

A review of Eastern and Western medicine by Angelo Druda for those who value alternative, complementary medicine. Angelo Druda is recognized as one of the 5 most respected herbalists in the world. The 3 part process of Purification, Rebalancing and Rejuvenation for bodily renewal is described in his highly acclaimed book, "The Tao of Regeneration."

He writes:

"China is the only country with formalized integrated medicine and most specifically in the treatment of cancer. They generate great remission rates. Studies show both there and in the West.... some large ones done in Australia and smaller ones in US, that the survival rates of the integrated approach far exceeded those who just used the allopathic approach. That tells the story. Interestingly in one large study, patients who only used TCM without allopathic intervention actually did as well as those in the integrated approach. Allopathic medicine is fundamentally empirical.... "this is good for that...." Oriental Medicine is rational.....find the imbalance and restore that balance so the body can do the healing and regenerating work.

The great virtue of Oriental Medicine in my experience is its ability to observe and detail the actual imbalance, the way it supports and nurtures the body, particularly the ability to tonify the organs of the body, such as if the kidneys are weak and need to be made stronger.... there is no such concept in Allopathic medicine. "

I will add, from my personal experience, that if strong allopathic medicines are required, such as antibiotics or other "cold" medicines, complementary support systems are not only recommended, but provide invaluable support through that process.
